Key Points

Ohio has released the latest school report cards that show how well Ohio students performed academically last school year.

Unlike the report cards students bring home with the A-F grading scale, the state grades school districts and each school building using a star rating system.

Three stars or more mean the district is meeting or exceeding state standards.

The Ohio Department of Education and Workforce has released its latest school report cards that show how well Ohio students performed academically last school year on state tests and other measures.

State officials say the annual report cards are intended to help parents, community members, educators and policymakers understand how students in their districts are performing academically, celebrate achievements and identify areas for improvement. The state released ratings for traditional schools and school districts, charter schools, Career Technical Planning Districts and dropout recovery and prevention schools.

How to read Ohio's 2025-2026 school report cards

Unlike the report cards students bring home with the A-F grading scale, the state grades school districts and each school building using a star rating system.

Three stars means the district is meeting the state's expectations. One and two stars mean the district performed below expectations, and four and five stars mean the district exceeded expectations.

Stars are given for overall performance and for each of the six categories that form the overall performance score. The six categories are achievement, progress, gap closing, graduation, early literacy and college, career or military service readiness.

Here's what each category measures:

Achievement: Tracks how students in grades 3-12 performed on state tests and whether they met state thresholds. The ratings are based on the tests that students took during the 2025-2026 school year.

Progress: Shows how much improvement students have made year over year by comparing the most recent state test scores with prior state test scores. Three stars means students demonstrated they learned as much as they were expected to learn over a school year. Progress can be an important measure for districts with lower achievement scores because it can show whether districts are helping students catch up faster even if they are still behind.

Gap closing: Measures whether students of different races, income levels and abilities meet state standards in English language arts, math and graduation. Chronic absenteeism, gifted services and support for English learners are factors in this category.

Graduation: Tracks the percentage of students in the class of 2025 who graduated within four years of entering high school and the students in the class of 2024 who graduated within five years.

Early literacy: Shows how well the district has helped its struggling readers get back on track, how well students performed on third grade reading tests and the percentage of third graders who were promoted to fourth grade. For this year's report card, the state is only counting the students who were promoted to fourth grade based on their test scores. The score no longer includes the students who moved up to fourth grade under other circumstances, such as their parents requested that they be promoted. The change has significantly lowered the early literacy rating for some districts.

College, career, workforce and military readiness: Shows how ready students in the class of 2025 were to pursue post-secondary education, the workforce or the armed forces by using metrics such as state tests, Advanced Placement exams, military enlistment, honors diplomas and technical assessments.
